How did the banking and credit union industry create an unsustainable bubble independent of the credit crisis? was there another fundamental bubble waiting to burst? At DMA, we've conducted lot of research to understand meltdowns. For many years, we've looked at historical data, and conducted modeling and analysis. We've found that the banking and credit union industry had created an unsustainable bubble independent of the credit crisis, and the meltdown could have been predicted. And, this understanding has been translated in measurement systems that can help banks and credit unions

Asia remains the cheapest place to enjoy a burger. China's recent decision to increase the "flexibility" of the yuan has not made much difference yet. A Big Mac costs $1.95 in China at current exchange rates, against $3.73 in America. Our index suggests that a fair-value rate would be 3.54 yuan to the dollar, compared with the current rate of 6.78. In other words the yuan is undervalued by 48%.
